The only candidate with Washington experience.

Doing the day-to-day work on the staff of Senator James Pearson, Nancy acquired a Senator's working knowledge of government and learned the responsibilities of the office. No other Republican candidate has this critical knowledge. Here's a Senate candidate with business experience, too. America needs leaders who know business first-hand. Nancy knows it, from being vice-president of two Wichita radio stations.

A family heritage of public service.

Nancy's father taught the Landon's by example; the interests of Kansas and the welfare of Kansans should always be of first concern. That's the kind of U.S. Senator she'll be. It takes a cool head and a warm heart to be a good Senator and Nancy's credentials demonstrate an 'I care about people' attitude. She's rounded out her experience in government and business by serving her community through various civic and community organizations. Her legacy is helping build a coalition across the state that's broad-based, strong and unifying the G.O.P. and Independents.

Her only special interest: KANSANS!

Nancy owes no group any favors. "Politics as usual" is not her approach to public service as a U.S. Senator. She has earned the trust of Kansans through constructive service. Now she's ready to take your mandate to Washington and work to promote the best interests of Kansas and the nation.

A fresh face with a positive approach to problem solving.

Nancy's a solution-oriented person by nature. She seeks the best answer, not a quick-fix alternative to the problems facing our state and nation. As the only woman Senator in the United States, the nation's eyes will focus on Nancy and the concerns of Kansas. She'll respond to the challenge, accept the responsibilities of the office and serve with dedication.

As the April 30 Hutchinson News put it: "Her view of political reality may be what the doctor ordered."

"As a nation, we must look beyond our immediate self-interests and be willing to encourage cuts in government spending and regulation. In one area or another we are all affected. Are we willing to take some risks, some belt-tightening, to insure future growth and development? I believe we are. For the United States to regain its world position we must address ourselves to the future — not to the political rhetoric of the moment. I'd like your support and vote on August 1. Kansans deserve an honest and decisive voice in Washington. My only promise is to serve to the best of my abilities and with all my energy. Thank you very much.

Nancy Landon Kassebaum for U.S. Senate"
Nancy Landon Kassebaum is the only U.S. Senate candidate in Kansas who made national news when she announced for the race. Her candidacy was covered by Paul Harvey, the New York Times, Chicago Tribune, San Diego Union, US magazine, Washington Star and other media from coast-to-coast.

Staff view:

Nancy Kassebaum: some fresh air

Nancy Kassebaum, the new Senate candidate for Kansas, is bringing a fresh approach to the campaign. She is running as a Republican, but she is appealing to a broad range of voters, including conservatives and moderates.

We all wonder why our tax money goes to studying such things as social behavior at a Pops up! We don't want a General Motors. We're here to tell you that the only way to reduce the deficit is through financial reform, and that people like herself don't understand the problems. She also said that it was time for the country to learn how to live within its means.

In Kansas:

The second Republican candidate for the Kansas Senate is in, with a campaign that is focusing on the importance of fiscal responsibility.

Nancy Kassebaum visited Concordia recently and met with some of her supporters. She is also making appearances in other parts of the state, including Pratt, where she visited with a group of farmers.

Kassebaum campaign makes Concordia visit

Nancy Kassebaum is on the trail and making visits to various locations in Kansas. She is campaigning on her support for tax reform and her commitment to the country's fiscal future.

The News:

Nancy Kassebaum supports the farm

Nancy Kassebaum, the Republican candidate for the Kansas Senate, has made agriculture a focal point of her campaign. She has met with farmers and other supporters in the state, and she is committed to protecting the interests of the farm community.

The New York Times:

Alf Landon backing newest senate hopeful, his daughter

The former Kansas governor is backing his daughter, Nancy Kassebaum, in her campaign for the Senate. He has given her his endorsement and is encouraging his supporters to vote for her.

And her support's growing...
Education
• B.A. Political Science, University of Kansas
• M.A. Diplomatic History, University of Michigan

Public Service
• Kansas Governmental Ethics Commission
• Kansas Committee for the Humanities
• Washington staff, Senator James Pearson
• Maize School Board
• Chairperson, Women’s Division, United Fund
• Senior Services Board
• President, Women’s Association, Institute of Logopedics (work with speech handicapped children)
• President, Wichita Young Adult Projects (an early drug prevention program)
• 4-H Leader
• Kansas Press Women’s Assoc. patron member

Businesswoman
• Vice President of KFH & KBRA Radio, Wichita
• Recipient, Women of Achievement Matrix Award by Women in Communications, Inc.

Family
Four children, John (20) and Linda (19), who attend Kansas State University. Dick (17) and Bill (16). Member of St. James Episcopal Church.